A Security Risk Assessment (or SRA) is an assessment that involves identifying the risks in your company, your technology and your processes to verify that controls are in place to safeguard against security threats. A Security Risk Assessment identifies all your critical assets, vulnerabilities and controls in your company and premises to ensure that all your risks have been properly mitigated. Imagine being tasked with remodelling a house, without being told what is wrong with it first. A security risk assessment provides you with the blueprint of risks that exist in your environment and gives you vital information about how critical each issue is. Knowing where to begin when improving your security allows you to maximize your during the assessment, the goal is to find problems and security holes before the bad guys do. The assessment process should review and test systems and people, looking for weaknesses. As they are found, they are ranked based on how big of a risk they are to the company. The resulting report will identify systems that are working well and properly secured, and those that have issues. A Security Risk Assessment will typically have very specific technical results, such as network scanning results or firewall configuration results.

Risk Management is an ongoing effort to collect all the known problems, and work to find solutions to them. Think of a Risk Management process as a monthly or weekly management meeting. Each week, risks and problems are identified, ranked and then discussed to ensure that nothing is slipping through the cracks. The goal of a Risk Management process is to continually improve the security of a company and work to eliminate all risks as they occur.
